There are more than 50,000 problematic products in LegitScript's database. Are your merchant's products on the list?

The supplement industry is estimated at $133 billion USD annually — and growing. But supplements are under constant scrutiny by government regulators, including the US Food and Drug Administration, the US Federal Trade Commission, and those agencies' foreign counterparts. How do you know that supplement merchants using your platform aren't selling illegal products or ingredients, or making misleading claims?

Plug in to the world's largest, most comprehensive database of healthcare products.

LegitScript's database contains over 110,000 products and ingredients, including more than 50,000 problematic products that contain unsafe ingredients or make problematic claims. With high-speed API access to LegitScript's database, you can conveniently check the status of dietary supplements, designer drugs, pharmaceuticals, and other healthcare products and ingredients at scale.

Comprehensive classifications that help you confidently assess risk.

Internet, advertising, and e-commerce platforms face regulatory risk, not only if products are violative but also if ads are found to make misleading claims. That's why LegitScript also tracks whether products have been associated with making misleading claims and classifies these as "Yellow Flag." Product classifications can also be global or country-specific so you know what products are permissible and where.

What are Red Flag and Yellow Flag classifications?

Red Flag

Products are tainted or dangerous, contain unapproved drugs, or are sold in some intrinsically problematic manner.

Yellow Flag

Products are sometimes marketed with impermissible claims that they can cure, mitigate, treat, or prevent diseases, or they contain unsubstantiated claims that they affect the structure or function of the body.
